citydesk@freepress.mb.ca

Strike stalks province's largest women's shelter

By Shamona Harnett

THE staff of Osborne House, the province's largest women's shelter, is on the verge of striking over a wage dispute - a move that would close the shelter indefinitely.

On May 3, the shelter's workers, part of the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the Manitoba Government Employees' Union, unanimously voted to walk out at noon this Friday if wage issues aren't resolved, said Brian Ellis of CUPE.

The salary of an Osborne House worker ranges from $15,698 for a children's support worker to $25,662 for a counsellor, wages Ellis said are too low, considering the intense nature of the work required at the shelter.

Neither the union nor Osborne House would reveal wage demands or offers.

Last year at Osborne House, more than 10,000 individual and group counselling sessions were provided to women and children in need, while the crisis line handled over 9,000 calls. There were approximately 11,000 overnight stays at the shelter last year.

"It's not uncommon for a mother and her three kids to come to us in the mid-dle of the night," said Ellis. "The family may not speak English and they may all need heavy-duty crisis counselling

He also said it's common for people on the verge of suicide to call the shelter's crisis line looking for immediate

"This is why we don't want to end up on the picket line," he said. "We need to be here for women and children in

Ellis said Osborne House's approximately 50 workers are anxious to settle on a satisfactory collective agreement and avoid strike action.

Osborne House's executive director Lea Frame said the current labour dispute is a result of underfunding by the provincial government. The province's shelters, including nine others across Manitoba, receive approximately $5 million a year.

Frame said those who use the shelter's services are being rerouted to the other shelters across the province.

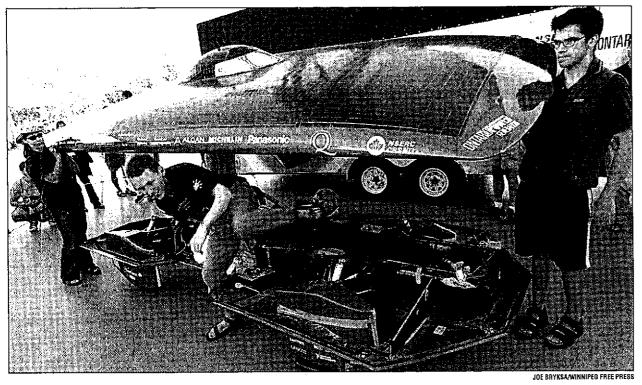

"We have never turned people away from Osborne House," said Frame. "And we hope that we don't have to turn anyone away if there's a work stoppage."

Family Services Minister Tim Sale confirmed during question period at the legislature yesterday that the province has helped Osborne House develop contingency plans in case its staff goes on strike, adding that as of yesterday, the shelter is not accepting admissions.

Sale would not say if the government is prepared to bring Osborne House under the jurisdiction of the Essential Services Act, which would ensure a working agreement, mandating a minimal staff, is implemented during a strike or walkout.

According to Ellis, Osborne House, which has been in operation since 1973, has never held a strike vote in its histo-

It runs on sun

Queens University engineering student James Keirstead yesterday climbs out of a trail-blazing vehicle that broke the world distance record for a solar-powered car over the weekend. It took Keirstead shown at The Forks yesterday — and his classmates two years to build the solar car, which broke the 4,058-kilometre world record on Saturday in Ontario. The car reaches a top speed of 125 km/h.

City ready to allow begging after dark, but not in groups

Panhandlers to get new bylaw

By David O'Brien

PANHANDLERS will no longer have to get up during the day to ply their trade: A proposed new bylaw allows them to beg in the dark, but not in a group.

City council is expected to strike down the old Panhandling Bylaw and enact a new one tomorrow as part of a compromise to avoid a lawsuit from the National Anti-Poverty Organization (NAPO). The old bylaw, passed in 1995, restricted panhandlers to daylight hours and prohibited begging near automatic teller machines, bus shelters and banks, or in a transit bus or elevator. The new bylaw seeks to regulate conduct, rather than the location or time of their activity.

If adopted, street people won't be allowed to ask for spare change in a way that obstructs pedestrian traffic. They can't verbally threaten or insult passersby, or approach a pedestrian as part of a group of three or more persons. The new bylaw also prohibits panhandlers from continuing to solicit from a pedestrian "after that person has made a negative initial response."

Michael Conner, a lawyer with Legal Aid's public interest law section, which represents NAPO, said the current bylaw discriminates against the poor and violates their constitutional right to free

NAPO was set to challenge the existing bylaw, but has agreed to drop its suit if the new bylaw is approved, civic documents said.

The city has also agreed to drop about 50 outstanding charges under the bylaw.

The new bylaw was developed after talks with civic officials, NAPO and representatives of business groups in the downtown and Osborne Village, where most panhandlers operate.

Spokesmen for business groups said they like the existing bylaw, but they were satisfied the new one would have enough teeth to regulate the behaviour of panhandlers.

"Rather than risk losing what we had, it made sense to go along with a new bylaw," said Rick Joyal, program manager of the Downtown Business Improvement Zone.

Joyal said a core group of about 20 panhandlers operated along Portage Avenue in past years, but their numbers seem to be down this year.

The Osborne Village area has even fewer career paupers on the street said Asher Webb, executive director of the Osborne Village Business Improvement Zone. Mayor Glen Murray, who helped draft the current bylaw, said he didn't see any need to change it.

If approved at executive policy committee tomorrow morning, the new bylaw will be tabled at council later in the day.

The maximum penalty under the bylaw is a fine of $1,000 or six months in

NDP scraps new contract for Hydro staff

Tentative agreement for 3,200 union workers ruled too rich for provincial government's blood

By Aldo Santin and Tracy Tjaden

■ HE New Democrats like to consider themselves as friends of labour, but they've made no friends among unionized staff at Manitoba Hydro.

A tentative agreement between Hydro and its two unions - the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and Canadian Union of Public Employees was scrapped after the Doer government ordered Hydro to scuttle the deal because it was too rich.

Finance Minister Greg Selinger confirmed during question period yesterday that senior Hydro officials were told that the deal it had struck with its two unions wasn't acceptable.

Selinger said the deal had contravened the compensation guidelines for Crown

"Everyone has to follow the guidelines, and that includes Manitoba Hydro," Selinger said.

While no one would talk specifics about the deal, sources close to the bargaining table said that Hydro had reached a tentative three-year agreement June 22 with the IBEW and CUPE, which were bargaining jointly as a coali-

Wage increases

The deal included annual wage increases of two per cent, with annual pay adjustment increases for a variety of job classifications of one per cent in the first year and 1.5 per cent in each of the next two years.

For some Hydro employees, wage increases would hit three per cent.

However, the government guidelines had capped all salary increases at two per cent annually, with a provision for the equivalent of a one per cent annual increase for benefits.

Before the unions were able to take the terms of the deal back to their members for ratification, the Doer government told Hydro it was unacceptable.

Negotiating teams for Hydro and the two unions are to meet today and tomor-"We're not happy," said CUPE president Bob Maes. "We thought we had a deal. Now we don't know what we've

Hydro president Bob Brennan could not be reached for comment.

Maes said wages were the remaining issues to be settled, adding he doesn't know how both sides can get around the government's wage cap.

And he wonders why they should have to after the province's largest union ratified a deal with the government Friday that calls for a seven per cent wage increase over three years, or 2.3 per cent each year.

"Governments are still being fiscally prudent, but when we look across the country at what's happening, it's a fair settlement and members saw it that way as well," said MGEU head negotiator Bill Comstock.

The deal also offers improvements to benefits such as weekend and shift premiums and better dental and vision care plans, he said.

Maes said the labour movement has been lobbying the government to exempt some Crown agencies from compensa-

"A Crown agency like Hydro doesn't depend on taxes to pay for its expenses so we think it should be at an arm'slength relationship with the rest of government," Maes said.

Both sides have been negotiating since January, The CUPE contract, which affects 800 employees, expired at the end of March and the IBEW contract, which affects 2,400 employees, expired

Malathion sets stage for show in park

Fogging a go near Rainbow Stage

THE city fogged Kildonan Park for mosquitoes twice last week, lifting a curtain of doubt over Rainbow Stage's production of 42nd Street.

The outdoor theatre had worried that its show, set to begin at the end of July, would be ruined because of an earlier decision not to spray the park with the pesticide Malathion.

The fogging program would have destroyed a breeding site in the park for special beetles that feed on purple loosestrife, a weed that is a menace to wetlands across Manitoba.

But the city decided it could protect the beetles from the pesticide by covering them with a plastic tarp, city entomologist Randy Gadawski said.

The park was sprayed twice last week and will probably be blitzed again as part of the on-going fogging war, Gadawski said.

A spokesman for Rainbow 'Stage couldn't be reached yesterday.

Meanwhile, cold, windy and wet weather halted fogging operations in the city Sunday night and it was unlikely they would resume last night, Gadawski said.

City traps are still registering more than 100 mosquitoes, down from about 400 last week, but still too high for comfort, he said.

Weather permitting, city crews will resume fogging tonight, starting in the northeast corner of the city and following a clockwise route.

Sections of North Kildonan, Transcona and St. Boniface are first on the list, followed by Windsor Park, St. Vital and St. Germain.

The crews then cross the river to St. Norbert, Fort Richmond, Fort Garry, Wildwood, Waverley Heights, continuing in a northwesterly direction.

Fogging takes place between 9:30 p.m. and 5:30

The truth about reverse mortgages for seniors

Receive money to earn a monthly income, travel or give children an early inheritance

Eligible seniors aged 62 and over can get from $30,000 to $300,000 cash from their estate through The Canadian Home Income Plan Reverse Mortgage program.

The program is known as a reverse mortgage because no repayments are required during the homeowner's lifetime. Instead, the principal and interest are repaid from the estate or by you, should you decide to sell.

The benefits of a reverse mortgage are many. The money is from your principal residence, so there is no capital gain tax. There's no need to sell your home to get the money you want. Ownership always remains in your name. Unlike a conventional mortgage, there are no monthly repayments required. You can move at any time, repay at any time. The program can give you a monthly income for life, extra cash or a combination of both.

Many seniors use the program for lifestyle enhancement – travel, home renovations or a new R.V. Others use the money to help

"A special thank you for arranging our financial affairs with such care and efficiency. We are delighted with our plan and feel much more secure for the future."

G.B., Maple Ridge

Information on the program is available through Royal Bank Financial Group, TD Bank, Scotia Bank and National Bank.

Your Security Assured

Naturally, you will be cautious about committing yourself to anything that involves your home - but you can rely on Canadian Home Income Plan. Founded in 1986, we guarantee that your home is never at risk.

Call 1-888-749-9786 to request your free no-

CANADIAN HOME INCOME PLAN

obligation information package

OPENING THE DOOR TO A MORE REWARDING RETIREMENT

A Millennium Project you can support: Fort Whyte Centre Reaching New Horizons Securing 460 acres of forest, lakes and prairie in southwest Winnipeg. This living legacy will include a Bison Prairie, a green corridor to Assinibolne Park, and 7 km of new interpretive trails and facilities.

For More Information About This Project: (204) 989-8355

For other projects see: www.winnipeg-millennjum.mb.ca or dial the FaxBack Service 957-2857

